“High School Student Photos Galore!” Website Now Open!

<http://www.tjf.or.jp/photophotophoto/>

The “High School Student Photos Galore!” Website showing photographs taken by Japanese high school students is now online. This site not only brings together photographs relating to high school students previously posted on various parts of the TJF website, but features two new sections, the “High School Students Photo Gallery” and “The Way We Are II.”

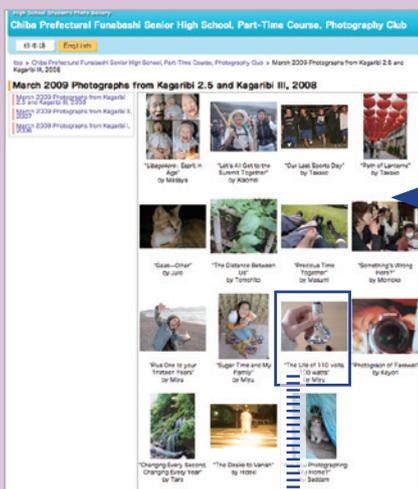

The “High School Students Photo Gallery” section shows young people around the world the daily lives and interests of Japanese high school students, in photographs taken by the students themselves. The photographs are selected from those taken by photography clubs and art clubs at high schools in various parts of Japan, including those that participated in the “Lives of Japanese High School Students: Photo and Message Contest” sponsored by TJF from 1997 to 2006.

The Way We Are II photo collection was compiled from prizewinning works of the “Photo and Essay Division” for high school students in the annual “Yomiuri Photo Grand Prix” organized by Yomiuri Shimbun and supported by TJF.

Both webpages may be viewed in either Japanese or English.

My grandmother asked me to change the light bulb in her kitchen. As I took out the old light bulb, I was struck with the thought that this filament was like a heart pumping through the life of the bulb. While the light bulb was shining, I wondered, how far it illuminated this world.

The girl in the picture is what people call an “Akiba-kei” or otaku; she loves anime and manga. She is also a “cosplayer,” who loves to dress up in costumes of her favorite characters. But she is completely different from the stereotypical image of an otaku; she is an ordinary high school girl who falls in love and loves dressing fashionably.
